TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL

Beach Continues

NEW YORK June 11—The Brooklyn court room was crowded again to day almost half of those present being women

Beach said a large amount of indignation had been expended on Moulton for alleged dishonorable conduct in not burning the documents in this case after the Bowen arbitration which it is alleged contemplated this action He called attention to the testimony of Storrs that Moulton said Beecher thought he had burned these papers but that Wilkeson was mistaken If he thought he had and if they were burned Tilton would have no protection There was no such intention in the [illegible] That the request to burn the letters arose not from the arbitration but came from Wilkeson after the tripartite agreement with which he was connected Beach said the letter of apology showed that the burning of all the papers wasn't [illegible] and that the destruction of none of them was contemplated by the arbitration Moulton held papers intact and unmutilated as the friend of both parties What has this matter to do with the examination of this case? The defense had gone into side issues to distract attention from the material facts The proposition that the trouble between Beecher and Tilton formed part of the subject matter of the Bowen arbitration was one of the most extraordinary which had been put forth in the case There was a business difficulty between Tilton and Bowen and there was a written submission of this difficulty Tilton and Bowen appeared before the arbitrators a decision was given and the money was paid Where was Beecher If he was involved in this arbitration Why did he not appear and submit his case? All the testimony was to the effect that nothing was discussed before the arbitrators except the business difficulty with Bowen These arbitrators were members of Plymouth Church and friends of Beecher and it was likely a suggestion as to the burning of the papers may have been made by them after the award The whole plea had been gotten up to slander and throw discredit upon a man who was the trusted repository of Beecher's letters, and a friend whom Beecher regarded as raised up for him by the special providence of God When the papers in the case were destroyed there was a clamorous outcry and when they were preserved there were ferocious complaints If the papers were so trivial as the defense alleged and so easy of explanation why did the defense complain if they were kept? If they furnished internal evidence of Beecher's innocence and secured his acquittal, why then the gentleman for the defense should be grateful to God and thank the plaintiff for their preservation The truth was these letters had a significance which gave the defense the strongest reasons to wish they had been destroyed After reading the testimony of Tilton in regard to his wife's confession Beach said it was easy to see how her secret rankled in her breast and how all the power of an aroused conscience forced her to make the confession of her guilt Beach said the language used by Tilton in repeating the substance of his wife's confession was his own language and that no attempt had been made to give Mrs Tilton's exact words This disposed of the verbal criticism upon which so much stress has been laid by Evarts

Just before recess while Beach was speaking he saw an expression of incredulity resting upon the face of foreman Carpenter Looking him steadily in the face Beach said "I am entitled to your respectful consideration sir I am presenting to you sworn evidence in this case evidence that has not been contradicted You may smile but you are here under oath to solemnly weigh sworn evidence presented before you and I have a right to expect your courteous attention after 13 days of speech making on the other side" This allusion of Beach's created a decided sensation in the court room

After recess Beach continued his argument. He said Evarts criticised the relation given by Tilton of his wife's confession on the ground of its particularity and because it was too precise and formal It was said to be unnatural that Mrs Tilton speaking of Beecher should specify that he was her pastor. Well Jacob in speaking to Laban of Rachel specified not only that she was his daughter but his youngest daughter There was a significance in the allusion to Beecher as her pastor It was this relation which he bore to Mrs Tilton that gave influence to his persuasion It was said the confession of Mrs. Tilton was no evidence against this defendant That was granted as the court has ruled it out, but when the confession was detailed to the accused who cowered before it and exclaimed that it would kill him it became significant evidence of his guilt The defense claimed this was a forced confession There was the weakness of their position They mistook the paper obtained from Mrs. Tilton on the 30th of December for her confession but the confession whose repetition staggered Mr Beecher on the night of the 30th was that revelation which was made by Mrs Tilton to her husband in July 1870 Speaking of the failure of the faculty of memory Beach said he believed there was more involuntary perjury committed in courts of justice than the human mind could conceive He did not believe a single witness in the case had given an accurate narrative of transactions which occurred two or three years ago or even one year ago If there had been it had been one of the miracles It was easy for a skillful cross examiner like Porter or Evarts to lead a witness to the use of some hasty or extravagant expression If he (Beach) had confessed to one of the jury that he had committed murder the fact of confession would never fade from his mind So Beecher's confession of guilt his expressions of remorse and despair fixed their character indelibly in the minds of Tilton of Moulton and Mrs Moulton although the minute details might not be accurately retained in their memories. Evarts had alluded to Beecher's noble efforts in England during our civil war and had asked the jury "But after all this are you gentlemen going to convict Beecher who had done this great work for his country?" And this was the argument said Beach that an advocate advanced to an American jury sitting in a court of justice to convince them of Beecher's innocence "You must not convict him England will laugh at you You must not tell England he seduced a woman or her aristocracy would meet you with contumely" My learned friend has had too much to do with England and her aristocracy If this was the way the jury were to be controlled then God help American institutions and justice Was their verdict to depend on what England thought of Beecher? No said counsel their judgments were to be controlled only by justice Counsel then went on to remark upon Evarts making a demi god of Beecher where its not a word was said by counsel in denial of the charge of improper advances and Tracy in his opening admitted the question to be whether the charge and offense was improper advances

Porter here interrupted and said he could not permit counsel to state a falsehood and misstate what they said "When said Judge Porter have we admitted the guilt of improper solicitations"

Beach replied that his learned friend put their friendship to a tension when he accused him of falsehood

Porter stated he was astounded Beach should say they admitted the guilt of improper solicitations

Judge Neilson stated he understood Beach to say that the charge of improper advances had not been denied

Beach angrily repelled the accusation that he had stated a falsehood and said he would not take such an insult from any man Counsel continued and dilated on the habits of Beecher Said he had stated his Saturdays were holidays with him and now they were the days when the troubles came to him He found time on Saturday to pay visits to Mrs. Tilton and put baby to sleep and engage himself for future duties in that connection as he said once "If the baby was uneasy and would not sleep send for me" He also found time on Saturday to take Mrs Tilton for a drive Counsel referred to Tilton's alleged cruelty to his wife and said there was only one witness Bessie Turner who testified to this brutal conduct on his part Joseph Richards Kate Carey Mrs McDonald and others aye even Beecher maintained that this was a happy household Yet Bessie Turner's testimony was taken against these witnesses and the jury was asked to believe it Counsel knew they all had prejudices against Tilton who would crawl at no person's feet but demanded justice at their hands and he would get it somewhere and somehow He will get justice if not there In the future and Beecher would meet with a fitting reward

The court adjourned to Monday morning

The [illegible] says Mr B F Preston of Vancouver has just returned from the Silver Star mines where he has been employed for a few weeks in making the necessary preparations for taking out the precious metal He gives it as his opinion that there are very rich mines in that region perhaps equal to any in Nevada and Utah He also thinks that the whole country is full of the rich treasure, and sufficient quantities to justify those who may wish to go into the business

Recently at Pierce City Idaho, one Higger[illegible] who had been imbibing too much benzine became belligerent and undertook to clean out the town He first tried his shooter on a Mr Westlake but without any serious effect and finally after bluffing half the people in town he was arrested and tried before a justice of the peace who committed him to jail He threatens to kill several persons as soon as he is at liberty again and his threats are so fierce that his son-in-law and daughter have fled from the town and are on their way to Puget Sound

The Lewiston Idaho paper says "We hear very encouraging reports from the mines discovered last fall by Noah White & Co There are now several companies at work making good wages White Maxon and Owens went in early this spring and struck good diggings just below the discovery claim Davidson & Co Howard & Co and several other parties struck good prospects and were in town this week getting outfits The mines are situated about [illegible]0 miles from Lewiston on Swamp creek a small tributary of the north fork of Clearwater and about 18 miles from Chapman's sawmill at the mouth of Elk creek There is every prospect of its being a good camp—something much needed in this vicinity where the old mines are failing so fast"

Who says there is no good in a Chinaman? The Northerner of Lewiston Idaho says "Henry the little son of Ernst Wesgerber came near being drowned this morning He was playing near the river a little below the brewery with another little boy when by some mishap he fell in A Chinaman who was working on a raft a little below saw something floating past where he was at work and almost immediately discovering that it was a child he plunged into the current and as the boy rose to the surface John seized him and swam ashore with his precious charge Life was nigh extinct, but the Celestial seeming to comprehend the situation at every stage began a vigorous system of rolling and by the time the town was fully aroused to the situation the boy was so far recovered as to preclude any further fears as to his safety"

The Register has this to say of the House of Providence belonging to the Catholics and located in Vancouver This is a brick building in the form of a Greek cross four stories high including the basement with zinc roof and verandas on two sides and is every way the most beautiful as well as the largest and finest building in the Territory The present cost reaches near $50 000 and to complete it will cost as much more It is now occupied and is accommodating at this time some 140 persons 60 of whom are orphans and the remainder boarders and Sisters The grounds around this building are being graded which adds much to the beauty of the surroundings The treasurer who has charge of this enterprise is a lady of extraordinary financial ability, self-possessed in her style far seeing, and every way competent

THE TOWN OF ST PAUL

ST PAUL June 8 1875

To the Editor of the Oregonian

A mistake copied into last week's OREGONIAN from the Statesman gives me the pleasant occasion of saying a few words about this place and its institutions St Paul is pleasantly situated one mile from the Wallamet river twenty miles from Salem and thirty two from Portland in one of the most thrifty localities of this State It has two stores one blacksmith one shoemaker a cabinet maker and a brewery A postoffice was established last summer and is getting along well

The brick church at this place is a very fine structure capable of seating a very large congregation It is well finished off and will compare with any in the State

The academy for young ladies deserves a more lengthy notice It is under the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Names The convent building was repaired last summer and is now in such a condition as to be both healthful and comfortable It is a large three story building capable of accommodating a great many boarders and day scholars This is one of the favorite educational institutions in the State and can be recommended as a place where parents can put their daughters and feel assured that they are morally intellectually and corporeally safe

Now for the mistake It reads as follows "The Sisters school located at St Paul is being rebuilt and improved Several thousand brick are needed for that purpose and the public spirited farmers of that locality are hauling them free of charge Last Monday nineteen of the farmers brought up their wagons loaded them with brick at the penitentiary started back to St Paul, and yesterday two more loads went down This is the kind of public spirited enterprise which will build up any locality" (Many thanks for the compliment Mr Statesman) The mistake lies in this The convent was repaired last fall as I stated before but the brick were being hauled to build a vault with, to be used for the purpose of a tomb for the Sisters of this State It will be a splendid piece of workmanship divided into cells capable of holding 111 It will be made of stone and brick and is entirely under the ground The Sisters will have a chapel built over it

SNAKE CHARMERS AT BENARES

One morning two snake charmers called at the hotel Around their necks huge boa constrictors were twined and each carried jars of smaller snakes and one of scorpions The performance consisted in taking the venomous snakes from the jars in which they lay coiled and in packing them up, the men placing their fingers in the reptiles mouths—tantalizing them to a frenzy and then wrapping the whole about their heads and necks where the hissing writhing mass presented a frightful spectacle

A cobra bit the finger of one of the men twice and each time he immediately made use of various charms—placed a small round stone over the cut flesh smelt of a piece of wood resembling flag root and then used it for marking a circle about his wrist This he told me would effectually prevent the absorption of the poison into the system The stone draws out the blood and with it of course, the virus It is generally supposed however and with much reason that the poison glands of the cobra have been removed in the first instance by the crafty snake charmers Several times the cobra advanced until within a foot of my chair but turned back at command of their masters During the entertainment one of the men played at intervals upon a sort of a flageolet The scorpion [illegible] consisted in stringing numbers of them together (as the whips of the Turks were made) which the men then hung upon their lips nose and ears

SOME RAILWAY ITEMS

HILLSBORO June 10 1875

To the Editor of the Oregonian

Tis an ill wind that blows no good and the breeze of litigation that has swept over the horizon of the O C R R Co seems to have blown up a little of good in furnishing information to us outsiders of how things are done With the litigation itself we, who are so fortunate as not to have any stock have no direct concern so that while we patiently await the news of the trial and only look upon the question as whether any change can be for the worse we may learn something by taking notice of what secrets are disclosed in the disagreement of parties so long in close confederation against the rest of mankind

Happening in Portland a day or two since I learned something of the evidence disclosed in affidavits being used in the trial before Judge Shattuck Putting that with what we all know the following instructive lesson may be evolved It seems that years ago the people of the westside of the Wallamet valley paid for a preliminary survey for a railroad This was in shares of ten dollars each for which they received some kind of a certificate which may yet become useful for wrapping paper or something of that sort These railroad companies were organized, they received and lost land grants and subsidies, sold out and bought in again changed names and changed back again until the average westsider is lost in attempting to trace their history, but this much is clear to all they were constantly asking aid from the people and as constantly receiving it until Portland had donated $100 000 Washington county $50 000, Yamhill $80 000 of which $30 000 was to be repaid to the people of McMinnville unless the railroad terminus should be made at that point The people of the westside also bought $40,000 worth of stock, and the General Government donated a large land subsidy Everything being thus prepared capitalists took the work in hand They borrowed $500,000 and gave a mortgage for $3 190 000 upon the property which had been donated to the company together with the property that would come to them by the investment of the borrowed money They then issued to themselves and their trustees several million dollars worth of stock, and proceeded to build equip and run the road

Since that time we have heard a great many eloquent tributes to the capitalists who like little deities have rescued us from the darkness of heathenism and built us a railroad (which by the way carries freight from Yamhill to Portland nearly as quickly as the river boats do and for only one or two dollars a ton higher rates) We have been treated to pæans of praise for our benefactors, and then to piteous reminders that the road does not pay expenses and interest. Now when we reflect that this road cost in cash $40,000 besides donations and the proceeds thereof, and that the capitalists who managed the enterprise have been paid salaries ranging from $2,000 to $5,000 a year for their services during the past six or seven years I think it a matter of self congratulation that we are not all mortgaged to Latham & Norris of San Francisco

On the other hand if this road 48 miles in length, ill constructed, dangerously out of repair, poorly equipped, with stations in the most inconvenient situations on the line, and managed without any attempt to foster or encourage business, can pay a president say $5 000 an attorney say $5 000, a vice-president say $3 000, a secretary, treasurer, superintendent general agent and chief engineer, say $2 000 each per annum and then pay the necessary expenses, and then pay the interest on three and a half million dollars that never came into the State, railroad building ought to be extensively practiced

But look at the matter as you will these facts remain patent and indisputable, the entire investment in the construction of the Oregon Central Railroad has been $250 000 of which $210,000 was donated by people who expected to be benefitted by developing the country, and $40,000 was subscribed out of the hard earnings of the westside yeomanry while the capitalists have paid themselves fat salaries for letting the people build them a railroad

WILL MR CHADWICK EXPLAIN?

June 11 1875

To the Editor of the Oregonian

As a friend of Secretary Chadwick, I regret to see that he makes no disclaimer of the charge of having, since 1870 drawn salary or salaries, under the head of assistant secretary or clerical service, which the legislature never intended he should draw As I understand the facts they are as follows and if I am wrong won't the secretary set me right, and state just what the facts are? Prior to 1870, the secretary drew $400 for an assistant, or clerical service, in his office. That year he asked to have it raised to $600. Consequently the legislature enacted a statute declaring that the secretary should be entitled to $600 As this act did not in terms repeal the $400 law Secretary Chadwick drew pay under both, making $1,000 Neither the legislature or the public understood this when in 1872, the secretary asked to have the amount for clerical service raised to $1 000 which was done by enacting that it should be $1 000, again, not in terms repealing the prior law or laws That Secretary Chadwick has been and now is drawing pay under all three of these laws when the legislature and the public supposed he was doing so under the last one only The public had no other knowledge or opinion, until the matter was unearthed by the committee on retrenchment and reform, appointed by the last legislature I submit that this taking advantage of the technical omission of the legislature to declare former acts repealed is a trick which would not be tolerated in private business between individuals, and is no more right or worthy between the State and its officers

If I have been misled respecting any of these facts I hope the secretary will point them out to me and state what are true Let us have no dignified silence, no general denials, but specific and full facts

The charge of the change of a statute pertaining to the treasury department somewhere between the legislature and its final authentication is a very grave one and should engage the attention of the next grand jury of Marion county I do not know that it is true but it has been publicly made and so far undenied and certainly that is sufficient cause for the grand jury to inquire if such crime has been committed and if so endeavor to ferret out its author or authors

There has been complaint of speculation in the treasury department of the State for more than a score of years I hope the time will come when it shall not be heard

ANOTHER SUBSCRIBER

A singular discovery has just been made in a field at Verres, (Seine et Oise) France Some workmen digging in a field, found at a depth of about six feet a skeleton wearing a helmet and cuirass and at the place of the hand the hilt of a sword, the blade of which had been eaten away by rust The armor appears to have been once richly damaskened and traces of gilt dragons could still be seen on the breast plate These remains are evidently those of some knight of the Middle Ages

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC

In the course of his remarks in response to a toast at the banquet given to the officers of the O S N Co and N P R R Co, at Walla Walla Mr A L Pritchard treasurer of the Northern Pacific, explained the condition and prospects of the road thus

With the sole view of protecting the interests of all parties interested, either as bond holders stockholders or creditors the trustees of the first mortgage bonds in conjunction with the bondholders applied to the U S court and a receiver was appointed by an unanimous consent, and the Hon G W Cass late president, appointed, he having resigned the office of president, and his successor, C B Wright Esq of Philadelphia Pa., first vice president being appointed A decree was then made by the U S court ordering the road and its lands and franchises to be sold and protecting fully the rights of all parties interested in the road. The company have in operation five hundred and fifty miles of road and it is paying more than the running expenses Floating debts are now quite inconsiderable, and mostly under control, the greater portion being due to officers and friends of the company It is expected that a new mortgage will be placed on the finished and unfinished portions of the road for such an amount as will command capital to complete the road at an early day Bond holders by receiver are to-day actually running the road and both they and officers and directors of the road are more hopeful of its early prosecution and completion than for a long time past In all this crisis in the company's affairs now rapidly passing away, its officers and friends have never for a moment hesitated to advance their private funds for the protection of the company's interest. In all my railroad experience I have never known a more upright and honorable body of men than those administering its affairs I do not hesitate to assure you that that can be done for the road and I trust the time is not far distant when our friends on the other side will be able to come to you over this completed road and receive that noble and enthusiastic welcome at your hands, such as has been so generously extended to us to-night when our interests will be no longer separated, but when we can join hands with you and go steadily forward to that prosperity which you so justly deserve and will surely obtain

The Daily Oregonian.

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 12, 1875.

SECRETARY CHADWICK, HIS ACCUSERS AND HIS DEFENDERS.

With a fierceness that indicates the consciousness of a bad cause, the Salem Mercury accuses the OREGONIAN of unfairness and untruthfulness in connection with the charges made by James McDonald against Secretary Chadwick. Our readers, remembering what we said on the subject at the time McDonald's letter was published, will doubtless be surprised, as we have been, to see the manner and spirit in which the case is met. Here is a paragraph from the Mercury's reply, a specimen by which the temper and candor of the whole may be judged:

> When journalism gets so low that it maketh or connives at a lie to conceal the truth, rather than publish it, an exposure should quickly follow the discovery of its hypocrisy. These reflections are called out after reading an editorial in the OREGONIAN of last week, reviewing a letter from one James McDonald, of Yoncalla. In the first place this McDonald is far from being a reputable character. For years his name has been a scandal wherever known, and any indorsement the OREGONIAN may give him will reduce that journal to the level of this "wickedest man of Yoncalla," commonly known as "Old Dan." Upon the falsehoods of McDonald's letter the editor of the OREGONIAN proceeds to inform the reader that the statements of that letter are true, and that the Secretary of State, and not him alone, but the other members of the State administration, should come to the front and explain to Mr. McDonald why the direction of the last House of Representatives with regard to economising rents is disregarded, and why a law failed to reach the governor in the same form as when it passed.

Every reader of the OREGONIAN will recollect that so far from proceeding "to inform the reader that the statements of the letter are true," we expressed no opinion on the subject, but said that so far as related to the change of a law between the Legislature and the Governor it involved no criminal charge against the Secretary if it was true, as there was no presumption that he made the alteration. So, if we were disposed to indulge in that style of discussion, it would be no very difficult task to make out a good case against the Mercury for the identical sin of which that paper accuses us. We prefer to leave that, however, to those who have necessity for it.

Secretary Chadwick says in his card which we published some days ago, that McDonald is a very disreputable fellow. The same says the Mercury. Both these witnesses appear to be intimate with him, and, as we are not, we shall not presume to contradict them.

But the Mercury says McDonald never wrote the letter; that it was cooked up by some one else and published over his name, he being a ready instrument in the hands of the real author who is concealed. In view of the familiarity which these witnesses manifest with the uses to which McDonald may be put in case of an emergency, we are reluctant to dispute this statement; but it is due to ourselves to say that if McDonald is not the author of the document which has so stirred up the State administration, we have no idea who is.

But now another word in relation to the merits of the controversy. The three charges made in the letter were:

First—That Secretary Chadwick had rented of Holman, Miller and Grover rooms for the State officials at a much higher rent than it would have cost to obtain accommodations in Reed's Opera House. This charge the secretary does not and cannot deny. He merely says the accommodations offered by Reed are not sufficient to meet the wants of the State, without specifying wherein they are insufficient; while Reed says he offered to furnish ample accommodations. The secretary may be right, but it is not McDonald he has to dispute him. The latter only repeated what had been repeatedly charged by men of as good standing as Mr. Chadwick.

Second—That an important amendment made to the act creating the office of Assistant Treasurer, was taken out of the bill between the time of its passage and the presentation of it to the governor, for his signature. The secretary did not deign to take special notice of that matter at first, but after reflection he concluded it was best to break silence. He gave out, therefore, that he had carefully examined the journals of the legislature and found that the reason the amendment was omitted was that the Senate never concurred in it. He probably forgot for the moment that that would place the matter in a still more awkward light, as a bill amended by one branch of the legislature fails entirely unless the other branch concurs in the amendment, or the former recedes therefrom. So the secretary had to revise his statements, and in order to do so he must needs institute further search. The result of this second inquiry we find—singular as it may appear—in the selfsame number of the Mercury, which is so full of savage denunciation of the whole story. And here it is in full:

> THE LOST AMENDMENT.
> Mr. Chadwick called on us last Wednesday, and desires us to state that by examining the journals of the two Houses in 1870 he was led to believe that the refusal of the Senate to concur in the amendment to the bill to create the office of Assistant State Treasurer, was the final action of that body on the subject. But on a more careful examination he finds that the matter was reconsidered by that body, and the amendment concurred in, though the amendment is not specified. He also states that he knows nothing of the bill further than that when it became a law it came to his office free from mutilation, signed by the speaker of the house, president of the senate, and approved by the governor. That he never knew of this question about the amendment to the bill until he saw it alluded to in the OREGONIAN.
> There may yet be something more found in the journal in regard to it, as the law, as filed and published, contains the same restrictions the amendment contemplated, but more concisely and clearly expressed.

So charge number 2 rests no longer on the testimony of McDonald, but is substantiated by Mr. Chadwick himself. As we have said, this in itself raises no presumption, so far as we can perceive, of any criminality of the secretary, he having nothing to do with bills passed by the legislature until after they have been submitted to the governor. But Mr. Chadwick, by taking pains to search out the truth of the matter, has shown that he considers it his duty, as custodian of the State's records, to investigate the matter. That is what we said at first and all we said.

Third—That the secretary has been drawing cumulative pay for the same services under three different laws. The particulars of this charge are plainly given in the letter of "Another Subscriber," published this morning, and they have also been referred to in the halls of the State legislature. This matter, then, does not rest on McDonald's statements.

These three matters are all that were mentioned in the McDonald letter, and every one is shown to be true by other evidence than his. If he is the villainous character he is said to be, the entire case is a forcible illustration of the incorrectness of the position assumed by Secretary Chadwick and some of his defenders, that a public officer may answer grave charges by simply saying the man who makes them is unworthy of countenance. That dodge won't work any longer.

'TOTHER FELLOWS ON.

The Oregon City Enterprise is the first Democratic paper, so far as we have observed, that has anything to say about the fraud practised in New Hampshire in order to give the Democrats a majority in the State Senate. The Enterprise does not claim to be sufficiently informed as to the facts in the case to form a positive opinion, but upon what information it has, is inclined to the opinion that the action of Governor Weston and his council was only their duty in the premises. After taking sides for the outrage in this way, the Enterprise expresses, and we believe with candor, its unqualified condemnation of all such conduct as has been charged against Weston and his associates, declaring, in substance, its readiness to help to its utmost ability the exposure and punishment of all such scoundrelism, whether in its own party or some other.

As indicated above, we make no question of the sincerity of the Enterprise, but why does it not deem itself sufficiently advised in the New Hampshire case to decide as to the applicability of its declared principles to that case? The facts are given at great length in all the leading papers of the East. These accounts do not, in general, disagree in any material point. The details, as we published them, were from the New York Tribune, a paper which, under its present management, can hardly be accused of too great partiality to the Republican party. We have since received the Concord Monitor, which, after making all due allowance for its strong partisanship, leaves no room to doubt that the Tribune's account was drawn as mildly as the case would admit of. The New Hampshire Farmer, an agricultural paper as its name indicates, feels called upon to pronounce the action of the Governor and his associates "a blow at Republican institutions." Is all this concurrent and uncontradicted testimony to go for naught? Not half so free from conflict was the evidence in the case of the Louisiana usurpation, last winter, but the Democratic journals, the Enterprise included, found not the slightest difficulty in forming an opinion in that case. We thought the evidence entirely sufficient then to justify their opinion of the merits of the matter; and now that there is abundant and uncontradicted evidence of the commission of an outrage of much the same character by the Democracy of New Hampshire, the people who read in the Democratic papers such vigorous denunciations of the Louisiana frauds have a right to expect—if they have a right to expect anything from party journalism—that the doings of the Democratic managers in New Hampshire will be measured by the same standard. But it appears to make all the difference in the word whose ox is gored.

THE PRISMOIDAL RAILWAY.

Mr. G. A. Fitch, agent of the owners of the prismoidal railway patent, called on us yesterday and explained the workings of this style of railway. There is a single rail placed on the apex of a triangular wooden chord. This latter is a prism in shape, its three flat surfaces being equal. It lies on one of its surfaces, so that the others converge to an apex over the center of the base. Along this apex a light iron rail is laid, on which the wheel of the car rests, the wheel being in the center line of the car instead of at the sides. There are at the sides of the rail flanges to prevent any displacement of the car, which revolve when they come in contact with the rail, thus avoiding most of the friction that would be produced by a stationary flange similarly situated. There is also a wheel, or roller, upon an arm projecting down from the body of the car on each side, which, though required to bear no weight, serve to check any lateral motion of the car, by resting upon the sloping sides of the prismoid. A road of this sort, it is said, can be constructed and stocked for less than half the cost of an ordinary narrow-gauge road, and when built will be equal to the narrow-gauge in speed, carrying capacity and durability, and superior to either broad or narrow-gauge in safety and durability. There is now, it is said, something like 150 miles of this sort of road in operation, and two hundred and fifty more in course of construction, which will be finished during the present summer. This may yet prove an important element in the solution of Oregon's railway problem.

Our morning contemporary of this city waxes eloquent over "the sharp political drama which is to transpire in this State on the 25th of October next." Just what sort of thing a sharp drama is, and how a drama transpires, will probably be explained in due time.

Secretary Chadwick stated to us positively yesterday that there is not word of truth in the accusation made by some of the papers that he received $500 for signing the lock bonds. He says he never received a dollar or a cent therefor.

The Daily Oregonian.

CITY.

RATHER TOUGH —A correspondent writing from Cowlitz, sends us a rather tough story in reference to an accident which recently happened to a well digger in that vicinity. He says: The person alluded to was engaged in digging a well a short time since. He had penetrated towards the center of this terrestrial ball to about the depth of 30 feet from the surface. Two men were engaged in assisting him. Our hero was wielding the pick and shovel and the two men were employed in working the windlass. While hauling up a bucket, or more properly speaking a half barrel, for such it was, the rope suddenly gave way when the load of dirt was near the top of the well and everything went down like a thousand of brick. The hero of the accident (who, by the way, was a very old man) happened to be standing erect at the moment in the center of the well. Before he could get to one side down came the half barrel on him. The bottom struck him squarely on top of the head. Strange to say the hero's head was the hardest for the bottom of the barrel gave way and the man's head passed safely through the mud. He received no injury whatever, but had to be drawn up and washed. Since that time, our hero has not had the courage to work in a well. He thinks it is not "all's well that ends well." Our correspondent vouches for the truth of his narration. It is a little tough but in the absence of the necessary 'papers,' we shall have to accept the story.

NEVER SAY "No"—Who has not seen him the seedy-looking individual with unkempt hair, out at elbow, boots turned over, and wearing apparel generally in a dilapidated condition, as he reels up to you and smacking his lips answers out 'Yes, thankee I'll take a little something.' We have now on exhibition in the composing room of this office an engraving representing this individual in the various stages from the young swell who sips his claret and flourishes his cane, until he reaches the last degree, in which we have just described him. Just why this warning to those inclined to "press their tansy" is placed in the keeping of the compositors is apparent, for it is well known the editorial fraternity are the uncompromising advocates of total abstinence and never take anything (unless they are asked). It was did not suppose the fair sex could ever be included in the ranks of those who never said no until the other evening at the Good Templar festival, we heard a youth of tender years as he stood up on the raised platform to his comrade, whisper pretty loud, "They never say no." "Yes," said his companion, as he looked wistfully at a nice plate of strawberries and cream which were rapidly disappearing through the ruby lips and down the swan like throat of a fair damsel "they [illegible] that's offered 'em. She's had four or five dishes already." We felt like giving that couple a plate of ice cream with two spoons, but refrained after searching our empty pockets.

TAKING THE CENSUS.—Assessor Barnard and his deputies are now busily engaged in taking the census of this county as required by law. A large proportion of the information has already been collected, and two of his deputies are out in the field. It is a 'big job' to collect and arrange the census and the assessor has only to the 1st of September in which to complete the census and assessment rolls so that they can be placed in the hands of the board of equalization, which will convene on the first Monday of that month. When completed the census roll will contain the following statistical information concerning the enumeration of the population and industrial products of the county. AN AMUSING ACCIDENT —An express wagon loaded with Celestials just arrived from the Flowery Kingdom, ex bark Forward, was proceeding up First street yesterday when, by some inadvertence of the driver, a not very serious but somewhat ludicrous accident occurred. The vehicle was crowded with the moon-eyed new comers, and their miscellaneous baggage, consisting of the usual assortment, was piled up to such a height that when the driver turned his team rather sharply into Stark street, the whole load of Chinese, bamboo poles, sacks of rice—articles that had paid duty and others that had escaped the vigilant eye of the custom house officers—were strewn along the street in inextricable confusion. To see them laid out in the street one would have supposed that half a dozen of the heathen were killed or mortally wounded, but when the driver jumped out and gently laid hold of one of their queues the effect was magical and the way the boxes sacks etc., were tumbled into that wagon was a caution when [illegible] and passengers, somewhat dusty and a little the worse for the wear, "jumped into the wagon and all took a ride."

VOICE FROM AUSTRALIA —Mr J W Phelps, a member of the Australian parliament, writing from Sydney, N S W, under date of May 7th, to a gentleman in this city, says "Tasmania is one of the most picturesque islands in the world, and the cream of the Australian climates, lying between latitudes 41° and 44°. I have received your many papers [the gentleman informs us that he sent Mr Phelps numerous copies of the OREGONIAN—ED] for which I am much obliged, especially the home parliamentary [Mr Phelps means the State legislature as the papers sent him contained proceedings of the last session —ED] paper of your State. The 'get up' and general appearance of the paper is so superior to ours, that my confreres of the Tasmanian assembly were much pleased with it. I observe one very important difference which I have always advocated, but which we have not yet persuaded our wise men is requisite—and that is punctuation." Such a letter coming from such a source, should be construed as the highest compliment that can well be bestowed.

Principal office in Portland Oregon. Capital stock is fixed at $24 000 in shares of $100 each.

NARROW ESCAPE —A private note from Salem says "While playing with some boys on the boom of logs near the Capital Lumbering Mills in this city, Master Grant, son of Capt. J B Scott, slipped into the water and had a very narrow escape from drowning. A Mr Paterson went to his rescue and caught him just before going down the third time. He was carried into a neighboring house where powerful restoratives were applied by Drs McCurdy and Richardson and at present writing the boy is doing as well as could be expected.

UNDER ADVISEMENT —The case of Ernestine Koch vs. steamer Oriflamme in the U S district court, was argued on Thursday and submitted to the court.

CHINESE PASSENGERS —At an early hour yesterday morning the bark Forward was drawn up alongside the Pacific dock at the foot of Salmon street, and the work of examining the baggage commenced. There were 302 Chinese passengers on board and the job of going through the luggage and inspecting it required some time. The custom house officials were active and vigilant but it required a long time for the celestials to pass through the trying ordeal and to regain their freedom. Quite late in the afternoon the passengers were all landed and quartered on their countrymen. To day the work of discharging cargo will be commenced.

MOONLIGHT EXCURSION —Elsewhere is the authoritative announcement of the City Rifles first excursion. The committee have arranged to make it the affair of the season and the friends of the company should stand by them. The company are desirous of purchasing a new uniform, and take this method of raising funds toward defraying the expense. We trust the forthcoming affair will be a success financially and we know it will be in other respects.

SALE OF CITY PROPERTY —Pursuant to instructions given by the Common Council Chief Engineer Hallock caused to be sold at auction at the corporation house on Thursday the following condemned fire apparatus 1 000 feet of leather hose for $7 about 200 pounds of hemp rope $15 gas fixtures which were first put up in No 2's house $2 50 four old fire hydrants, $8. The total sum netted was about $35 50.

VERY ILL —We learn that the condition of Father Kelly is such that but little hopes are entertained of his surviving long. He was seemingly improving in strength until Thursday evening when the symptoms assumed a more alarming appearance and his death may not be unexpected at any time.

SECOND NIGHT OF THE REV E P. HAMMOND IN PORTLAND.

At 7 45 the large auditorium of the Taylor street M E church was densely crowded by an audience drawn out to again hear the celebrated Evangelist. Promptly at the hour appointed Mr Hammond commenced the exercises by singing several hymns from the "Song Evangel" after which prayer was offered by the Rev Mr Beard the Quaker Evangelist. Mr Hammond then proceeded to briefly state the order of the meetings to be held in this city next week. These will commence with a meeting for children at the Rink on Sunday afternoon at 3 o clock and there will be children's meetings on Monday, Tuesday and perhaps Wednesday. During the week there will be Bible meetings conducted by Mr Hammond every morning at 8 30 at the Baptist church and he was in hopes that the business men of Portland would try and arrange their business so as to give one solid week to the Lord. He then proceeded to speak more extendedly of the propriety of meetings for children and the necessity for their conversion in the days of their youth. He believed that in the next four or five days four or five hundred children would be converted if Christians would do their duty. If the Sunday school superintendents teachers and members of the different churches would come forward and engage in personal effort do as their pastors wished them to do, and as Christ had told them to do there could not fail to be a general outpouring of the spirit and all would feel that they had been blessed by engaging in the good work. A few verses from the 15th chapter of Acts were read. He stated that as Dr Hollis Bushnell had said little children should be taught the love of God so young that they would not be enabled to remember when they were converted. Every child that is old enough to commit sin and do wrong is old enough to learn the necessity for a change of heart and to have a full and complete reliance upon their Savior. He had found many Christians who did not know when they were converted. It seemed to them as though they had always loved Jesus. He was talking with a young man in Dublin and asked him the question when he was converted. He could not tell but his father General Smith, a child's Evangel said that in 1833 when he was but four years of age he was holding a series of children's meetings the little boy's mother was singing the song "I have found a friend Jesus is mine." The little one came to his mother with tears in his eyes and requested her not to sing that song any more for Jesus was not his, he was not his friend. His wife repeated the conversation to him when he came home but he put it away from him saying that he was too young and could not realize the saving love of Jesus. During the evening conversation was turned upon the same subject and the same song was sung. Again did his little boy repeat his request, and for the same reasons. The next morning he did not get up as usual his father went to his bed and found him upon his knees praying. He asked his father when the next children's meeting was to be, and if he would not ask them to pray for him that the holy spirit might come into his heart and live. He was soundly converted, but when I saw him he had forgotten when. He spoke of a little child who had never seen his father, but his mother had taught him to love him and by means of a photograph had made him familiar with his features so that one day when his father came in unannounced and unexpectedly, he was ready to spring into his arms and say that he loved his papa. It is so with our Saviour. They have not seen Him but we can make them familiar with Him and learn them to love Him and be ready to receive Him when He comes. He recited a poem descriptive of the Saviour blessing little children. Peter was a good man, but like many of you did not believe in the conversion of children until after his eyes were opened. He related incidents of the children's meeting in London, under the auspices of Dr Noel which resulted in the conversion of over 300 children how that one year after they were all found true and steadfast in the faith of incidents in his own life, and said that it was from such facts and experiences that he had learned to have faith in the conversion of children. An appeal was then made to Christians, not to look to him but over and above him to Christ as the source where all their help must come from. All who would come to the Rink on Sunday afternoon and engage in personal work and who would speak to some one about the Savior, were requested to rise to their feet. About 150 responded to the call. Some time was then spent in singing when the audience was dismissed, a little after 10 o clock.

The Rink has been filled with seats, and a large platform built capable of seating at least 200 singers. A grand piano, four organs a cornet and other instruments will be there to aid the singing. There will be four entrances to the Rink, and the floor covered with sawdust to prevent noise.

Mr Hammond will not take an active part in the morning services next Sunday. Each of the different ministers will hold service in their respective churches. The Taylor street Sunday school will meet as usual on Sunday and then march down to the rink in a body at the close of the school

OREGON QUARTZ MILL AND MINING COMPANY.

It may be remembered by some of our readers that mention was made a number of weeks ago that some parties of this city had fitted out a scientific prospector to search for mines in Southern Oregon. From an interview had with one of the parties in interest, we glean the following. A purse was made up by ten gentlemen two of them forming the exploring party. The instructions briefly given to them in starting were these. Don't touch any mines however rich they may seem to promise unless they will pay right from the surface. Weeks rolled round and nothing corresponding to these instructions was found. Galice creek and other famous localities were investigated, but still nothing satisfactory—the purse was exhausted and filled again when finally Messrs Kelly and Stevens, the prospectors announced that they had found some exceedingly fine ledges in Josephine county. Ore was found on one of their claims paying $12 50 per ton, and on another, from which they now have out some fifty tons unselected ore shows $62 63. The company we understand, have secured some 11,000 feet of claims rich in gold and silver. A number of men are at work opening the ledges and it is claimed that they have 200 tons of pay ore on the dumps. The company have recently purchased a small first class five stamp mill which will be up and in running order inside of six weeks. We are informed by one of the company that they now have sufficient funds in the treasury to keep the enterprise running until bullion returns are made.

Articles were filed yesterday in the county clerk's office by Messrs L P W Quimby, J B Roberts J B Pilkington and H H Northup the name of which corporation is the Oregon Quartz Mill and Mining Company. Duration of the corporation fixed at 50 years.

The business and object of the corporation shall be to carry on mining, to locate purchase hold work and vend quartz and gravel mines mills and mill sites and ore mines. Amount of capital stock of the corporation $500 000. Capital stock to be divided in to 50 000 shares of $10 each. The principal place of business of the corporation is Portland.

The Elmwood and Warwick collars are made differently from any other. The edges are all folded, and the surface is an exact imitation of linen.

The railroad war and other events that have occupied the attention of the public for days past were nothing as compared with the excitement created by BLUM & WALDMAN the well known Clothiers who are selling their summer stock of Clothing, Men and Boys wear at fearfully low prices. Before making a purchase step into their place and see what they can do for you. The stock of furnishing goods at this house is complete.

Big Bonanzas are all very well in their way but that popular dealer in Clothing JOS KOHN opposite the National Bank is content to give his many patrons at the old stand in general will the very latest goods in his line and to give the purchaser the benefit of low prices during the dull times. His stock of Clothing Furnishing Goods etc was never more complete. You will never regret your purchase at Kohn's. Call to-day

At 8 o clock this morning the steamer Annie Stewart which has been chartered for the occasion, will leave the O S N Co's wharf for the grounds

Yesterday the pupils teachers and friends of the Sunday school of St Paul's Episcopal church Oregon City came down on the E N Cooke to hold a picnic. Landing at the foot of L street the excursionists wended their way to East Portland Park where some hours were spent in lunching swinging and indulging in various innocent sports. During the day many of the excursionists visited Portland, and also a number from the city went over to the Park. In the afternoon the excursionists embarked on board the Cooke and returned home

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 12, 1875.

EFFIE'S DOLLAR-BILL.

"Stella, is it you?"

It was a bitter cold night, the full moon shining with a freezing light over a cold expanse of glittering snow, the branches of the glen tinkling and crackling under their weight of icicles, the stars glistening afar off. I had run across the beaten path that led from the house to the barn, to get some of the red Baldwin apples that were packed so snugly in the oat bin, for old Mr. Cornell had come to spend the evening, and my mother took pride in her unpretending hospitality. But just as I stopped to lift the lid of the bin, a rustling noise in the hay startled me. Before I could utter a low cry that trembled on my lips, I saw that it was Stella Severn.

Stella Severn, neighbor Lockwood's "bound girl," a wild, reckless thing, who received a bad name at every one's hand, and contrived somehow, to get blamed for every scrape that was going. Whether Stella was really bad or not, no one could tell—but somehow she was perpetually under the ban. Mrs. Lockwood, a stiff, rigid dame of the Puritanic type, knew no more how to manage Stella Severn than the matronly hen comprehends the roving nature of willful duckling that takes to water in spite of everything—and for some recent escapade, the full details of which I did not know, I had been forbidden by my mother even to speak to Stella.

"Yes, it is I," said Stella, slowly rearing herself out of the recesses of the hay, and staring at me with her big Andalusian eyes. "And I am oh—so cold!"

"What are you doing here?" I asked, holding up my lantern in sore perplexity.

"I am trying to sleep," said Stella. "I have run away."

"Run away? What for?"

"Because I couldn't stand it any longer. Mrs. Lockwood accused me of being a thief—she had lost some miserable old teaspoon or other—and I won't be called a thief!"

"But, Stella," I cried, my conservative nature thrilling with vague terror at the mere idea of such bold measures as these, "what are you going to do?"

"The Lord only knows," Stella answered, with more reckless truth than reverence.

"Perhaps mother would let you sleep in our spare room," I said.

"Perhaps she wouldn't!" scornfully retorted Stella. "No decent person lets me in!"

"I mean to ask her."

"Ask, then, and get a scolding for your pains!" laughed Stella bitterly.

"But it's so cruelly cold, and mother wouldn't shut out even a dog in such weather as this."

"Perhaps so—but I am worse than a dog! You mean kindly, Effie Heart, but you'll find out the folly of it."

I made no answer, but ran as fast as I could back to the house, where, breathless and panting, I preferred my request.

"A thief! A runaway! In my house!" cried my mother.

"A lazy, good-for-nothing, who would rather lie in the sunshine than work any time," echoed Deacon Cornell.

"Go and warn her off the premises immediately," said my mother.

"I dunno but I'd ought to go for the constable," dubiously remarked the deacon, feeling his stubby beard.

I slunk away disheartened. Stella's prophecy had been correct. But I was determined not to desert my old playmate thus. Creeping up to my room, I took a solitary dollar-bill, treasured toward a new blue sash for a spring muslin, and wrote a short note to Hubert Lisle, the young artist who had boarded with us the summer previous, asking him to befriend the friendless. I believed he would do as much as that for my sake, and then hurrying once more to the barn, I crept up to Stella's side.

"Stella," said I, "you must go away from here."

"I thought so," responded Stella, calmly.

"But here is a dollar—all the money I have got. It will take you to New York, if you walk fast and reach the depot in time for the midnight express. And here is a note to a gentleman who may, perhaps, help you to find something to do."

Stella threw her arms about my neck, and I could feel her tears wet and warm, upon my check.

"Effie Heart," sobbed she, "if all the world was like you, perhaps I shouldn't be as bad as I am. Yet I'll do my best. Give me the money and let me go."

I watched her dark form plodding away over the snow until the black speck vanished under the wall of trees that lined the road, and then I came back into the house where my mother and the deacon were discussing their cider and apples.

"Has she gone?" asked the former.

"Yes, she has gone," I answered.

"I am glad of that," said my mother. "I've no faith in that Stella Severn. She might have had a good home with Mrs. Lockwood, if only she had behaved herself."

And it was not until sometime afterwards that I ventured to tell my mother what I had done.

"You are a fool," said she, with acerbity. "Your dollar is as clean thrown away as if you had pitched it down the well; and I'm sure I don't know what Mr. Leslie will think of your interference."

I hung my head and made no answer. But when the summer hung her coronal of big cream-colored roses over our farm house door, and Hubert Leslie came back with his easel and stretching umbrella, I ventured to ask him of Stella.

"Oh," said he, "that black-eyed girl with the Spanish face? Yes, I remember now. I got her a place as child's nurse with my cousin, Mrs. Evelyn, but she ran away within the month."

"Never mind, Effie," said Mr. Leslie, kindly, "a good action is never entirely thrown away. Stella Severn's gipsy blood could ill bear constraint; but I don't think she'll forget you for all that."

That was just before Hubert Leslie asked me to be his wife. We were married the next spring, and I went to New York to live.

We had a little bit of a room, opening out of Hubert's studio, where we kept house like a pair of turtle doves in a nest. Although Hubert was such a genius, and had painted so many beautiful pictures, he was young, and comparatively unknown, and we found it hard to live, particularly after the twins had opened their blue eyes on the wintry sunshine of a glorious February day. I had done a little fancy needle work for the store heretofore; but now my hands were tied, and it was hard to see the shadows creep over Hubert's brow, and know that I had no power to lift them.

So the years went by. More little ones clustered around our scanty board, and although Hubert worked hard and conscientiously, there were other artists who pandered to the public taste and received more orders. We were very poor.

"Hubert," said I, one day, when the load of poverty had been almost more than we could bear, "don't you wish you never had married?"

"Do I wish the sunshine had never come into my life?" he asked. "Never put that question again, little wife. What would existence be worth without you and the bairnies?"

"If you could only sell that thousand-dollar picture," I sighed, thinking of something that had been on the easel for months. He shrugged his shoulders.

"Harper says it isn't worth a copper," said he. "Harper thinks it is far beyond the popular standard of appreciation."

I sighed; but in spite of all our privation I would not have asked Hubert to lower his grand ideal of art. I was proud of it. I was proud of him.

Hubert came in from the studio next day with a radiant face.

"Wifey, the golden age has dawned, and pure art is appreciated at last. I have sold my picture."

"Not the 'Sunrise,' Hubert?"

"Yes, the 'Sunrise.' Look! Here's a check for $1,000, signed by Signora Estella Severini, the prima donna who is singing at the Academy. She is in the studio now, and she says she wants to be introduced to the artist's wife."

"But, Hubert, my dress! My gingham dress!"

"Oh, your dress is well enough, Mrs. Cinderella," he cried, laughing as he drew me towards the door.

A lady sat in the model's chair—a tall, superbly moulded lady, dressed in black velvet, and an Indian shawl, with hair of rippled purplish black, and large dusky eyes. The instant she looked up I knew her again.

"Stella! Stella Severn!" I cried, with a sort of gasp.

She rose, laughing and crying, and ran into my arms.

"Effie, darling, to think that we should meet after all these years!"

She told me, then, her story. How, after long battling with the world's vicissitudes, she had come across an opera manager, who perceived the hidden treasures that existed in her voice, and voluntarily assumed the expense of training it.

"And I am rich and famous now," said she. "I can pay back the debt I owe to you, Effie; or I think if it had not been for you and your dollar bill, that winter night, I should have been driven to swallow the little vial of laudanum I had all ready in my pocket!"

"Oh, Stella!"

"Ah, but I should. You do not understand how persecuted and hunted I was, Effie—but thank God, that is over!"

Signora Severini's thousand-dollar check was the beginning of our new fortunes; it was the fashion to copy her whims and caprices. Other people bought because she did—and pretty soon we were able to move into a pretty cottage of our own in the suburbs.

And when my mother and Deacon Cornell, down in the country, heard what Stella Severn had become, they declared sagely:

"Well, there's never any telling how things may turn out in this world!"

FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

Financial.

FRIDAY EVENING, June 11, 1875.

Gold in New York, 116¼.

Legal Tenders in Portland—buying, 86½; selling 87¼.

Coin Exchange on San Francisco ½ per cent. premium.

Currency Exchange on San Francisco ½ per cent. premium.

Coin Exchange on New York 1 per cent. premium.

Currency Exchange on New York ½ per cent. premium.

Telegraphic transfers on New York 1½ per cent. premium.

Gold Bars 750 par.

On account of the fact that we have a less proportion of paper money, prices for legal tenders are always higher here than in New York. For instance, when gold in New York is quoted at 116¼ legal tenders are usually worth about 86½ on the dollar here, but their actual value is 85¾. The immigrants now arriving in our State seem to think it a ground for complaint that the money which they bring to Oregon—it being mostly legal tenders—must be exchanged at a discount of 13@14 per cent. But they do not seem to consider the fact that their money is bringing them from 1@1½ per cent. more than it would in the Eastern States. This is a feature in our way of doing business on a coin basis which is much in its favor.

Monetary matters are unchanged to-day, and with no increase in the volume of the current demand for loans or discounts, rates remain very steady at 10@12 per cent. at the banks on ordinary time favors.

We have received a report of the operations of the Carson mint for May. The bullion deposits for coinage for the month amounted to $615,000. The melter and refiner turned over to the coiner the sum of 509,000 ounces in fine silver, and 31,537 ounces in fine gold. The coinage was $329,000 in double eagles and $278,000 in trade dollars, making a total of $607,000, which is the largest business ever transacted at the Carson mint. The coinage there for the previous month was $594,000, including $99,000 in double eagles, $75,000 in trade dollars, $220,000 in half dollars.

In local trade circles there is no more general activity than was noticed yesterday, while there is some increase in the demand for seasonable summer goods. As a whole, the business of the season has been as good as jobbers expected, and wholesale merchants generally express themselves as satisfied with the result of transactions. The favorable weather for the crops, which we are now having, will have a tendency to increase the trade with the country, and interior merchants are encouraged over the prospect. There is more activity in millinery goods for the retail and country trade, and the houses in that line are doing a good business. Summer clothing is moving, with some freedom at low prices. The stock of cotton fabrics in the country is above the demands of the trade, and our Eastern advices note the fact that a number of leading factories have determined to suspend for a few weeks or months during the season, in order that supplies may be reduced. The market for staple and fancy groceries is quiet, all goods in that line being only in moderate request.

Agricultural wares of a seasonable character are being quite extensively called for, and the firms in that trade are placing large amounts of goods of that character.

The Wool Trade.

There is at least an impression abroad that the commodity of wool is to bring a round figure during the season, and we would be glad had we assurance to give our readers that such would be the case. So far, there has already been enough of the Oregon product sold to fully establish prices in our market, but buyers here have seen fit to come down on their offers at the opening of the season. The telegraphic report of the condition of the Boston market, as we published this morning, is perhaps not far wrong in saying that much is held in the interior for better prices. Our readers can also see the wide distinction in prices for ordinary lots and desirable combing and delaine wools, the quotations running all the way from 22 cents for the former to 68 cents ₩ lb for the latter. Such a distinction has not hitherto prevailed in this market, but shippers are now trying to make a proportionate difference here. Last year, for instance, there was a prominent San Francisco buyer operating considerably in Oregon. Some of the lots he purchased for 18@20c ₩ lb, brought him hardly that figure in the Boston market, while other lots for which he paid 25 cents here brought as high as 75 cents ₩ lb in the east, though on the whole, the season's business is said to have been a losing one to him, the proportion of his lucky purchases having been too small to make up for large quantities of the poorer lots. Practical wool men are now inaugurating a new policy, and propose to pay for a choice article its value, and for that which is almost unsalable in the eastern market, no more than it is worth. The sooner this reform in trade is effected, the better it will be for all concerned, and we believe that the cautious policy being pursued even now will lead to a better condition generally of the Oregon wool which is to be marketed at the east hereafter.

The Farmer of this week says in reference:

> We cannot learn of any improvement in the wool market, or see any indication of an immediate advance in price. There is great depression in the manufacturing interests at the east. Mills are stopping, etc., and the wool market seems inactive. Prices offered are an average of 23c, being 22@25c for the best. The agent for Marion county granges, Mr. W. J. Herren, informs us that he will to-day open bids which he has received from Portland and elsewhere, and that probably the wool at his disposal, 60,000 lbs, will be disposed of to the highest bidder, though he has reserved the privilege to refuse all bids if he thinks best.

We learn since that the wool referred to by the Farmer, was sold to a Salem firm as the highest bidder, the terms being reserved.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching, and dandruff; and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."
